

ADVENTURES IN

In the 1890s, George Fodor used a hot-air balloon to rise into the sky and get a closer look at clouds and to take weather readings.

WEATHER SCIENCE

Before the days of weather satellites and radar, it wasn't easy to find out what was happening in the skies above.

In 1919, a man flies a weather kite to measure air temperatures and moisture high in the sky.